

Assignment Zero – L^AT_EX Limericks

Ryan Munger
Ryan.Munger1@Marist.edu

August 28, 2024

1 Limericks

From a time of spirited morale
Emerged a language named Pascal.
Despite the compiler's constant griping,
Value was found in strictly typing,
Braving the years with firm rationale.

On the search for man's greatest pal
A contender rose, named Pascal.
For simple syntax always has your back,
A vintage shell without a crack,
To carry you down life's canal.

Programmers who love C plus plus
Find high-level python treasonous.
Despite the complexity of a pointer,
Low level code becomes an anointer,
Blessing you with skills if you aren't superfluous.

There once was a professor named Labouseur
Scared students run for the door.
With a website superior to Brightspace,
Pupils may focus on an algorithm's embrace,
Finally establishing man-machine rapport.